roast•ing
/ˈrōstiNG/
noun

Roasting is the heat process that turns coffee into the fragrant, dark brown beans we know and love.

COFFEE ROAST GUIDE:

LIGHT ROASTS are light brown in color and generally preferred for milder coffee varieties. Light roasts retain most of the caffeine from the coffee bean and tend to be more acidic than darker roasts.

MEDIUM ROASTS are medium brown in color with a stronger flavor than light roasts and a smooth finish. It's other referred to as the American roast because it is generally preferred in the United States.

DARK ROASTS have a smokier flavor with less acid and caffeine than lighter roasts. Look for European, Viennese, and French varieties.
